Today Marks 150th Anniversary Of Our Constitution

Today, September 17, throughout the country marks the 150th anniversary of the framing of the United States Constitution.

It was due to the instability of the fundamental law of the period, namely, the Articles of Confederation, that on May 20, 1787, delegates from twelve of the thirteen colonies (Rhode Island excepted) convened at Philadelphia, Penn., for the purpose of framing a new system of government.

Following a session of four months, over which George Washington presided, the convention adjourned on September 17, 1787, after having framed the United States Constitution. Thirty-nine delegates signed the document.

By June, 1788, nine of the colonies had ratified the new Constitution, thus making it fundamental law of the United States of America. Rhode Island was the last to ratify, which was done in 1790, due to the threat of building customhouses on her borders so considering her a foreign country.

It should be of interest to all residents of Connecticut that of all the plans suggested concerning state representation in Congress, the Connecticut plan was accepted over all. That is why each state sends two senators and representatives in proportion to population to Washington.

PROTESTANT CO-OPERATION

The idea has been suggested many times by the townspeople, that co-operation and intimacy of the Congregational and Episcopal Churches here, would be to the advantage of both societies.

History records that due to a grant of twenty pounds additional to the salary of the pastor of the Old Stone Church back in 1788, many of the members seceded from the church and formed the present Episcopal Society.

This minor incident should not be the cause of feeling today, as the living Episcopalians had nothing to do with it, whatsoever, and many members of the Episcopal Church would gladly be in favor of having the two churches brought more closely together.

It is possible that if this was done, with the help of the pastors, that the churches would progress in a more rapid manner.

Man (employed by a Scotchman): "I have been around here ten years, sir, doing three men's work for one man's pay, and now I want a raise."
Employer: "I canna gie ye that, but if ye'll tell me the names of the ither two men I'll fire 'em."

"How's the public sentiment out here?" asked the politician, who was passing through a rural community.
"Still goin' strong," answered the native. "There were sixteen cars parked in my lane last night."

Marking The Cattle On A Thousand Hills

By Bertha Clark

There is a certain alphabet and language which the greatest linguist in the world could neither speak or use without the help of a certain prairie dictionary. One glance at the hieroglyphics would cause him to draw a mental picture over all languages he may have acquired and pronounce this one to be unintelligible and beyond comprehension. But to the prairie people, it causes no mental callisthenics, for to them it is a very simple and necessary language, which spells and means no more and no less than the Word OWNERSHIP.

Without this language, the vast stretches of prairie would not be a safe grazing ground for horses and cattle during the winter months, and the spring 'round up' would be a more difficult and hazardous business. As soon as the grain is gathered and threshed, the cattle, and chiefly the horses are turned out to forage for themselves and are given the freedom of the prairies. They soon become part of the prairie—landscape where they bivouac and feed throughout the severe western winter, amid snow, wind and ice, and where on cold still nights the thermometer will sometimes register for forty to fifty below.

Before they are turned out to wander at will (sometimes they wander thirty or forty miles) they are put through a branding ordeal, or in other words they cannot travel without their registration cards, or identification marks. Irons with the respective brands are made hot enough to burn into the side of the beast. To the recipient it is an alarming operation, not so much on account of pain, as the shock and fright they receive.

Not long ago, one very fine young steer having witnessed the branding of his fellows and having smelled the burning, bellowed and bled when his turn came. When he was caught and branded, he decided with ox-like stupidity that he might just as well die at once, which thing he did! The verdict was "death from fright!" A record of every brand is registered, published and kept by the recorder of brands. Beginning with the letter A, the English alphabet goes through so many twists and contortions that the thousands of brands look like a jumble of Chinese and Hebrew, or indeed, it looks as if all languages of all peoples are thrown together to make a grand razzle-dazzle of ideas and punctuations! When the alphabet is turned and twisted and added to and taken from until it is exhausted, brands are made from all kinds of objects and signs, such as pistols, keys, flowers, crosses, mountains, fish, pipes, jugs and so on.

Notwithstanding the fact that these elemental wanderers of the prairies have to make their own beds and supply their three square meals a day, where best they can find them, the general report at the spring 'round up' is that they are in better condition than those which have been carefully fed and stabled all winter. Nature provides them with a great warm coat and the hair grows so long and thick on their legs and bodies that they have the appearance of being elaborately decorated with a soft fringe trimming. There are, of course, some which are not able to stand the rigors of the winter and succumb. They become food for coyotes. In the summer the prairies are strewn with their bleached bones.

When seed is being sown and grown, cattle and horses are supposed to be 'rounded up' in enclosed fields and are not turned out again until the grain is harvested.

When a pound keeper has cattle or horses in pound, before he can notify the owners, he turns to his Brand Book, as a business man turns to his City Directory. Having identified the mark borne by the animal, the Brand Book supplies him with the owner's name and address.

What's What In BUILDING CONSTRUCTION

An open forum for the discussion and explanation of construction and material problems
By Walter R. Shiner
Reg. Architect, State of Conn.

SUPERVISING SMALL HOME CONSTRUCTION

A new sidewall asbestos shingle is now in vogue which has quite an advantage over wood shingles and does away with upkeep.

It is fireproof, comes in a variety of colors and a few designs, will not curl and is good for the life of the house if what the manufacturers claim for them is true.

Keasbey Mattison, Johns-Mansville and some other concerns make them in varied forms and with varied forms of application. These concerns loan or rent to the contractor, cutting and drilling machines electrically operated which saves considerable on the labor.

They may be mitred at the corners or finished with metal corner beads and the beads are to be preferred from a construction standpoint.

They cost about the same as wood shingles laid per square and would be satisfactory to allow in lieu of the wood shingles if such offer should develop.

The only point to watch in connection with their application is to see that the proper flashing is applied around the windows and doors, that the paper is applied under the joints and that the machines are used for cutting and drilling. Also see that they are properly fitted and applied straight to line.

The Hat-Box

Youthful Turban

A very smart youthful turban was recently displayed in an exclusive shop window. Made of black french felt with french felt trim, it was shaped triicorn in front with the very new sloped back fitting closely to show the shape of the head, sinking in tightly at the neckline.

At the left side front was a turn-back caught with a felt quill. It was a long one inch wide quill shooting toward the center front of the hat and extending four inches above the hat. The quill making the high point. Almost all hats have an extra high point and if not in the crown it is in the trim.

There is really not much to this little turban but it is extremely smart.

THE PEARL OF THE EAST

by Arthur L. Griffiths,
M.A., Yale

It is said that Tokong, chief of the Sibop tribe of Dyaks, left his village with a large party of his warriors, on a hunting expedition. A few only were left behind to guard the women and children. At the time that the hunting party went away, the crops were ripening and would be harvested on the hunters' return. When the hunters did return, they found — the women and children carried away into slavery, the defending warriors killed, the crops ruined and Tokong's home village reduced to ashes. Whereupon Tokong swore to avenge the massacre and plundering. So he, with the warriors who had gone with him on the hunting expedition, started off in pursuit of the robbers. For many days they followed the plainly marked trail left by the robber band.

One noon, Tokong's party were resting in the shade furnished by a great boulder. A rough, gruff voice was heard to rise from beyond the other side of the great rock. Tokong climbed the boulder and peered over. He saw there a giant frog. It had been the voice of the frog that they had heard. The frog spoke to Tokong.

"Tokong, you are a fool to only kill the robbers when you overtake them. Cut off their heads too, and all sorts of good fortune will come to you."

Tokong took the frog's advice. They caught the robbers, killed them, and then cut off their heads.

Their good fortune started at once, so the legend tells. The river near which they were, turned around, flowed uphill and thus carried them quickly back to what had been the ruins of their village. To their great surprise, the village was restored, the crops standing and ripe and the women and children alive and safe in "Home, sweet, home."

Believing this, head-hunting became firmly established. We shall hear more of that unpleasant occupation in subsequent installments of this tale.
