WINGS OF THE WORLD

REPORT OF A MIRACLE—Aviation's book of the year has appeared with the year has hardly begun. It's the report of the Army Air Corps of approximately 20,000 men and 3,600 airplanes that has grown in a few years to an army of close to 2,500,000 men and thousands upon thousands of planes.

One significant part of the report reads: "At one time in the earliest day (of the Air Corps), the Commanding General constituted exactly one-third of all Army flying personnel." That was back before World War I, when the then Lieutenant Arnold held Expert Aviator's Certificate Number 4, and Pilot License Number 23.

the career of smiling, white-haired Gen. Henry H. Arnold. His report could well have been a monument to personal achievement.

NO "CHOSEN INSTRUMENT"—As for the monopoly proposal for post-war international aviation has been attacked this time by Ralph S. Damon, vice president of American Airlines, speaking in Washington on behalf of 17 of the 19 U. S. airlines which favor competition.

This country should not adopt a single operation, even though called by the high-sounding name of "chosen instrument," he declared, merely because some other country has it. "Better service to passengers and better transportation between continents will be achieved only by true competition," he said, "and not by having a 'chosen instrument' of the U. S. and a 'chosen instrument' of some foreign power operating in conjunction at the same route and doing their silt like to each other in the morning to dilute the business or income by cartel methods."

QUESTIONS FROM READERS—Q. When was the first helicopter flight? A. First successful flight probably was that of Heinrich Focke in Berlin in 1937. Sikorsky's first was in May 1939. Five years ago, many models had been flown, one by a Frenchman as long ago as 1907.

What is your solution question? Answer it in "Wings of the World," care of this newspaper.

INFORMATION SERVICE FOR INDUCTEES
Connecticut young men inducted into the armed services are getting sympathetic attention on an almost infinite variety of personal problems through an arrangement worked out by the Connecticut War Council and the New Haven Council of Social Agencies.

Miss Marjorie Ross, trained social worker, is on duty daily now at the New Haven Induction Center ready to answer the questions of worried inductees, concerned with how their families are going to live while they are away, what to do about their insurance policies, or a hundred and one other matters.

Miss Ross conducts an Information and Referral Service, set up at the request of the First Service Command. She is a member of the War Council staff and works with an advisory board from the Council of Social Agencies.

1944 Commercial Registrations Equal To 1943
Commercial vehicle registrations for 1944 are expected by Motor Vehicle Commissioner John T. McCarthy to equal the 1943 figure of 53,563 as of December 31st.

"We are receiving renewal requests of commercial vehicles now," stated the commissioner. "All of our offices, located in Hartford, Waterbury, Bridgeport, New Haven, Danbury, New London, Norwich, Norwich, Stamford, Williamamit and Torrington, are ready to take care of all renewals, both commercial and passenger car."

"Now after year, commercial fleet owners are first to apply for renewals. When the individual car owners considers renewing a single registration as a bother, what would he think of renewing registrations for large fleets, running into hundreds of vehicles in some cases?"

These commercial fleet owners generally renew by mail, and we urge all motor vehicle owners to do the same for their own convenience as well as to enable our department, working with a reduced staff in all offices, to serve them efficiently and promptly.

"We may have a slight drop in passenger car registrations but commercial vehicle registrations should be held up to 1943 which was only slightly less than 1942. Renewing registrations by mail is easy. Application is attached to registration certificate. It needs only to be signed by the applicant and with the fee, which amount is plainly printed on the certificate, mailed to the nearest motor vehicle office."

Not all the problems are brought up by the inductees themselves. One of the examining physicians rejected a man for a serious mental condition and voted the belief that the man might have to be committed to an institution for his own good and that of the community. Miss Ross referred the case to a social agency in his home town with a request that the latter arrange for psychiatric care or commitment, dependent on the results of more complete examination. The Social agency also was charged with the responsibility of interpreting the situation to the man's wife and family. While that examination is continuing, the man is receiving psychiatric care that may be timely enough to prevent his commitment.

When he learned that three such Class B dependents would be entitled to a total grant of $79 a month, the inductee stated bluntly that it was not enough to keep them going under the circumstances. He was told that the case would be referred to the Red Cross in his home town for investigation. Should the Red Cross recommend that further assistance be given, he was told, supplementary aid would be forthcoming. Also, he learned, temporary assistance like that was possible in the event that the scheduled financial allotments did not arrive on time.

Then the inductee expressed concern over his insurance as he was unable to pay premiums while in the service. He was informed of the arrangements that could be made so that the policies could not be cancelled while he was in service, although he would have to pay up back premiums after his return to civilian life. When he expressed further concern about a loan of several hundred dollars which he still had to repay, he was referred to a member of the War Council's Committee of the Connecticut Bar Association who will handle, without charge, the legal technicalities surrounding a postponement of payment.

As the last of his weighty problems disappeared like rising mist, the young man's attitude changed abruptly and he voiced profuse thanks.

Public Transportation... AND JOBS
In war or peace, there's an important relationship between public transportation and JOBS. That is why, today, ours is classed as an ESSENTIAL INDUSTRY.

After the war, The Connecticut Company service will be a factor in determining whether jobs are plentiful or scarce. Transportation must make it possible for people to reach the points where they earn money, as well as spend money. THIS TRANSPORTATION MUST BE QUICK, EASY, COMFORTABLE AND PLEASANT.

The present day bus is a great improvement in passenger comfort and appearance over its earlier sisters. The bus transportation companies are prepared to take advantage of the improvements on buses that will be made available after the war.

The Connecticut Company
"Did you get home all right last night, sir?" said the street car conductor to one of his regular passengers.

"Of course. Why do you ask?" "Well, when you got up and gave your seat to the lady last night you were the only two in the car."

Members of the Knights of Columbus in Connecticut have pledged themselves to buy $1,000,000 in War Bonds in the Fourth War Loan which opened Tuesday, the State War Finance Committee announced today.

The Knights are the first of the large fraternal organizations which took active part in the previous War Loans to set a quota for the new campaign.

In a letter notifying the committee of their $1,000,000 goal, William J. Mulligan, grand knight, recalled that in the Second War Loan the Connecticut members accounted for more than $2,000,000, although their quota was only $722,000. They accounted for a similar sum in the Third War Loan last September.

Acknowledging the letter, Eugene E. Wilson, Chairman of the State War Finance Committee, described the K of C record in the past as a "magnificent accomplishment."
