Books:

The Nightwing's Quest:

In a dark elven matriarchy many leagues underground, the ruling Nightwing's eldest daughter Tiala must save her people from her evil brother turned assassin.

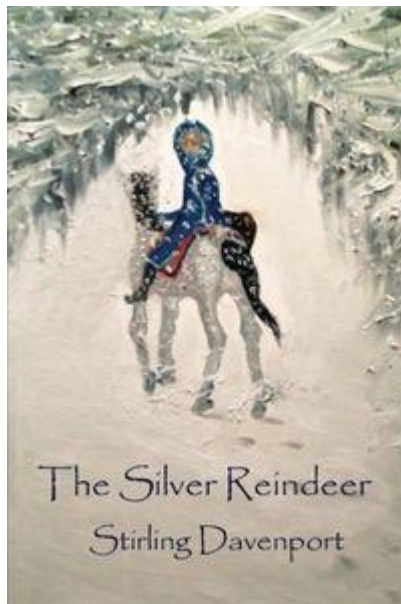

In her search for champions in the dreaded Surface lands, a lot can go wrong, and her new cadres are an unpredictable lot with their own conflicts, desires and prejudices.

Eventually Tiala manages to return to her homeland underground for the final battle and surprising conclusion.

This philosophical and sometimes violent fantasy casts a spell of magic, danger and romance in a world of mystery and adventure.

The Silver Reindeer:

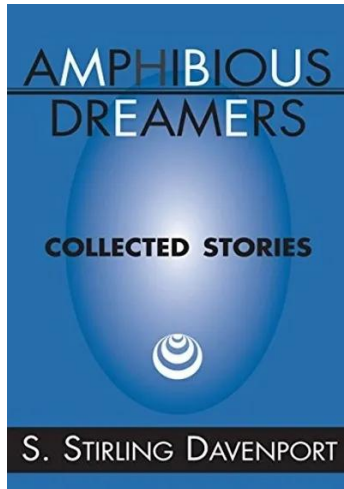

In a snowbound country called Montrovik, a young priestess discovers a telepathic bond with an ancient artifact – the chalice of the Silver Reindeer. It urges her to remove it from the sanctuary's altar and flee into the snow mountains.

In this coming-of-age tale, Magda must survive the perils of blizzards, wolves and bounty men to reach the summit.

Though she attracts an unexpected ally along the way, she isn't sure if he will be friend or foe. Soon it is clear that both Magda and Thorn have a much more dangerous enemy who will do anything to get his hands on the chalice and use its power for evil.

Amphibious Dreamers:

This collection of stories by Stirling Davenport evolved over a period of 20 years. The tales are organized loosely by genre, although such designations can be ambiguous. Stories which appear at first to be fantasy are interwoven with reality. A gravedigger sees the ghost of a dead child. A man's obsession with memory leads him into a past life as a voodoo priest. An artist has a recurring experience with a homeless woman who may be his true muse.

The book features many stories published in anthologies elsewhere, including "Abba's Mark" from the vampire anthology "The Darkest Thirst," and "Engineering Beauty," from the 1999 Price of Technology contest by eternity.com.
